FEB 12TH RECAP

HEAT 20, LAKERS 18

The Lakers and Heat made an early case for "Game Of The Year" last Sunday! It took a pair of overtime periods but the Heat were finally able to drain the sudden-death jumper and win the game 20-18, evening their record to 1-1 on the young season. Despite a two-point halftime lead for the Lakers, the two teams stayed even throughout the vast majority of the contest. Jamie Rasmussen was the game's high scorer with 14 of the Lakers' 18 points and the Heat's Owen Carl finished with 10. Jaxson Davis may have been the smallest player on the court, but the youngster hit one of the game's biggest shots in overtime!

THUNDER 20, BULLS 18

It was a back and forth game for the little Thunder last Sunday at Joy Of The Game, but the boys in blue (well, turquoise if we're being technical) were able to stave off a late Bulls push to claim a 20-18 victory. The Thunder kept their perfect record in tact and grew stronger throughout the contest thanks to solid teamwork and fundamental, balanced offense. For the Bulls, who now look to bounce back after suffering back to back one-possession losses, team moral continues to be high. Derrick Rose may not be lacing up his shoes for THE LEAGUE's version of the Bulls, but that won't stop the kids from playing like MVP's!
